Roseville Deputy City Manager Julia Burrows, who worked for the city for 22 years, has been hired as managing partner for Sacramento nonprofit Valley Vision.

Valley Vision said today that Burrows will broaden its "talent and experience in clean technology, green-sector economic development, climate change and municipal matters."

Valley Vision said Burrows will team with fellow managing partner Kristine Mazzei to help oversee initiatives within a six-county regional partnership known as the Green Capital Alliance.

As part of her duties in Roseville, Burrows also oversaw the city's Office of Economic Development.

Valley Vision was founded in 1994, and its employees and member organizations aim to maintain and improve "the social, environmental and economic health of the Sacramento region."

Roseville just named former Sacramento City Manager Ray Kerridge to be its new city manager.
